

Etymology heath style

Educationally humorous, with a side of autistic ingenuity

Ranger

- Originating in 1600's as a synonym for gamekeeper of a large property, most likely from the huge range the holders of this title had to cover daily.
- Now when we refer to rangers however, we are most likely to be talking about members of an elite combat unit.

heath

- Heath (my first name) was apparently used to describe uncultivated land.
- However it can also be used to describe nonreligious, such as the Vikings.
- The English used lands like described at the first bullet point for game ranches

Herter

- Unfortunately, despite three hours ruminating on it and extensive searches from my home computer as far as I can tell herter is (see right picture)

cyborg

- Cyborg a combo of cybernetic and organism, used to refer to a fusion of flesh and machine (clear example to the right)

android

- Androids are very similar to the Cyborg in that they are built to mimic humans, except androids are 100% mechanical and some real androids have been built.
